The Biddle House - Mackinac Island

Introduction

Dwight Eisenhower was President, the average home cost $12,200, and Architecture school tuition was $100 per semester at the University of Michigan, when the Michigan Society of Architects decided to form a 501(c)3 supporting organization to undertake the fundraising support for the restoration of the Biddle House on Mackinac Island. The Michigan Architectural Foundation (MAF) was born and the first of many investments were made in Michigan architecture. The founders believed that the quality of life in Michigan is directly related to the quality of architecture, those that produce it and those that preserve it.

In 1977, the MAF led the fundraising to renovate and restore the historic Beaubien House in Detroit as the new headquarters for the American Institute of Architects Michigan. This was the second largest project undertaken by the MAF.

From 1957 to 1987, the Michigan Architectural Foundation Board of Trustees was the same as the AIAM Board. The transition from a concurrent Board to an independent Board was the start of truly investing in architecture. The return on investment horizon went from short term to one that would last in perpetuity, and the building of an endowment was started.

Today, the Michigan Architectural Foundation supports programs that increase awareness of the value of architecture, programs that educate children in the principles of architecture, scholarships for future architects and, as was the case in the beginning, historic preservation.

The Michigan Architectural Foundation is a trust with currently $1.7 million in assets and generates $60,000 a year in support of advancing our understanding of how architecture enriches our lives.

The Future

We believe that Michigan architecture improves the quality of life. It stimulates a deep, emotional connection with the places we occupy, houses our lifetime of stories and enriches our lives.

These benefits require a long and sustaining investment to educate our children about our built environment, develop future architects and building professionals, and preserve our historic buildings. We have developed a variety of programs, grants and scholarships to support our objectives. They are listed below along with the financial goals we must achieve to ensure an impact in perpetuity. Your role is important. We hope you will consider investing in the future by contributing or by starting your own fund with a mission for which you are passionate.
